Climate Change Policy in the Obama Administration: Prospects and Challenges

During his campaign, Barack Obama laid out an ambitious plan for energy and climate policy, including a strict cap-and-trade program and massive new investments in energy research. How are such proposals likely to fare in the first years of an Obama Administration? What factors will affect the new President’s success in this area? What can the new Administration do to make progress in addressing climate change and the U.S. dependence on fossil fuels?

November 20 • 8:00-9:30 p.m.
Dodds Auditorium
Free and Open to the Public